

Celebrate Summer!

Visit Bordentown City's newest park, featuring a butterfly garden!

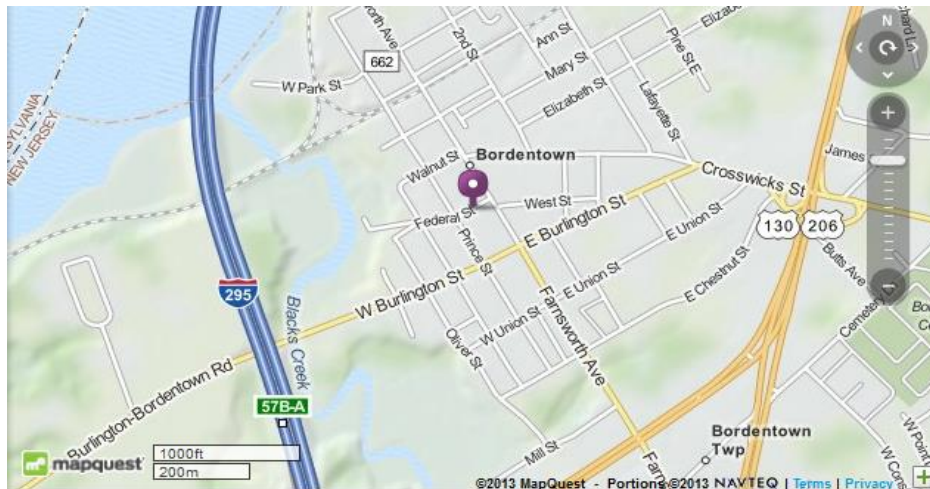

Introducing Lime Kiln Alley Park, Bordentown City's hidden gem, located along Blacks Creek, and accessed from Federal and Walnut Streets. This park was created by D&R Greenway Land Trust in partnership with the City of Bordentown. The park features a trail, picnic table, small parking area, and as of 2013, a beautiful garden designed with native plants to provide habitat and food for butterflies, birds and other animals.

Did you know?

- Blacks Creek is part of a large natural area, called the Abbott Marshlands, comprised of more than 3,000 acres of natural wildness in a densely populated landscape.
- The creek is a freshwater tidal waterway that drains into the Delaware River at Bordentown Beach.
- Native Americans lived here beginning 13,000 years ago. It was on this site that the nets used to catch shad in the Delaware River were laid out to dry.
- This permanently protected parkland was created by assembling more than a half dozen properties, beginning in 2004. There are plans to expand the butterfly garden this fall.

Visit the park often to walk the trail, enjoy seasonal changes, catch a glimpse of wildlife, cast a fishing line, and observe the changes in the tide. You will walk where Indians, early colonists, and likely Joseph Bonaparte, brother of Napoleon, once walked.

Prepared by the Bordentown City Environmental Commission
324 Farnsworth Avenue
Bordentown, NJ 08505

www.bcec.com

With support from the Bordentown City Green Team

bordentowncitygreenteam@gmail.com

And D&R Greenway Land Trust